Simon Tucker is an independent adviser on social innovation and a pioneer of the fields of social innovation, social entrepreneurship and social investment. As former CEO of the Young Foundation (YF) he initiated and shaped the UK social business ecosystem like only few others. YF conducts research into social innovation, accelerates early stage social ventures as well as starting its own ventures, and advises governments on supporting social innovation and entrepreneurship. His research outputs included scoping the field of social innovation, developing the original concept of a 'social impact bond' and the initial market research for Big Society Capital, the UK's wholesale social investor. Simon was lead adviser to a series of national, EU and international governments and public bodies and holds a variety of offices in the sector.
